Jerome and Anne McGann,
my siblings by choice, if not blood, have sustained me through friendship, love, and support for my art almost since the beginning of my time as an artist.

My husband Joseph Holbach and his family have given me the love that has kept my brain from flying away altogether to outer space.

I dedicate this book to them all.

I am grateful to Jerome McGann not just for writing the essay included in this volume, but also for encouraging me to undertake the production of this book and advising me in the many decisions behind its creation. Very early on in my art career, he advised me to catalog and document my creatures. It is because I followed that advice that I have been able to organize the material presented here. At an important stage for me in the development of my work, Virgil Burnett made me more aware of the importance and beauty of paper. Many other friends have encouraged me. I dare not try to name them all, lest I realize after printing has begun that I have made a blunderous omission. Friends, please forgive me. I am also grateful to Lindsay Lake, Rachel Holscher, Kim Doughty, Chloe Johnson and the printers at Bookmobile, who have brought this volume to life. Were I religious, I would also add the Shehecheyanu Prayer. Instead, I offer profound thanks to Ina Harris Walker and Roswell Walker, my great-aunt and great-uncle, whose spirit kept me in life and allowed me to come to this moment.

Introduction

My creatures presented in this book are a selection from a much larger group. For at least the remaining time I am alive, all of the creatures for which I have images (almost all of them) may be viewed online at arthurbkennickell.com (see the QR code below). Here, each image or set of images is accompanied by minimal information: the catalog number, title, medium, date of completion, and size.

As others have often remarked, sometimes it is perhaps best that artists say as little as possible about themselves and their work. I mostly agree with this, but it may be unfair to expect someone new to the work here to make the effort to entirely invent their way in, though invention to some degree is essential. With this thought in mind, I offer a brief introduction to me and my creatures.

I was born in Savannah, Georgia in 1948 and grew up there, before leaving in 1966 for the University of Chicago, where I intended to study to be a physicist. I never returned home for very long after that. During the time I lived in Savannah, what I experienced was a town with beautiful and then not broadly appreciated architecture in varying degrees of decay, large amounts of gorgeous pristine marshland and other nature, many very bad attitudes, and some transcendent attitudes too often wrapped up in a bitter cover. Everything felt very ingrown with everything else, something like the complex ecology of a swamp, as I visualized it then. A swamp like that can be full of really frightening creatures of all sorts, but sometimes that overheated mix produces improbably dazzling flowers that are somehow not eaten or destroyed immediately. The flowers most present to me were thoughts. Trying to make sense of the positive and negative heartbeats of this mental and physical world occupied a large space in my beginnings as an artist. The past is never really left behind, but of course much has changed for me and the places since then.

Most of my work is concerned with impressions of human forms or the sensations of being present in a human form. This focus is perhaps most obvious in my earliest work. But I have never been interested in trying to make copies of the objects or people around me. Altered photographs and collages are the closest I have gone in that direction—hardly a close approach, as I hope you will see in some of the creatures included here. At an early point in my painting, someone once described my creatures as “erotic vegetables”—that gave me an easy tag line for a while, but only as a joke.

Though I have broad interest in many periods of art, I am especially fond of William Blake and others in his circle and Italian art from the time of Giotto through the transcendence of the baroque period. There are aspects of those sensibilities in which I feel at home. But being a child of the 20th Century and having absorbed many of its (and later) cultural and visual currents, I see the earlier and more recent work from many perspectives, which lead in my work to an appearance of what might pass for abstraction. This term is for me a gateway for encompassing a reality in our time, certainly in my time. The realities in my art are what may be called “queered” ones, though not necessarily sexually so. Bent in many dimensions.

I hope you will enjoy looking at my creatures. For me, they are breathing.

Afterword

Arthur Kennickell and the Creatures of Lucifer

19. Where the son of fire in his eastern cloud, while the morning plumes her golden breast,

20. Spurning the clouds written with curses, stamps the stony law to dust, loosing the eternal horses from the dens of night

—William Blake, The Marriage of Heaven and Hell (plate 27)

dies inlucescat et lucifer oriatur in cordibus vestris

—2 Peter 1: 19

Only a few of Arthur Kennickell's 1800 or so works come with traditional titles. The rest are "Untitled". But those few titles signal the entire work's humane spiritual investment: "Unchained Flowers" (3.10), "Assumption of the Virgin" (6.116.1), "Sleeping Disciples" (6.1.126), and perhaps most striking of all, two eclectic titles: the late "Ganesha with Saints" (6.1.97) and the early gouache on poster board drawing of "Mother Spirit of being" (3.165.0).

Those exceptional titles signal the urgent force being carried by that otherwise ubiquitous title "Untitled". In Kennickell's universe, the sense, though not always the meaning, of "Untitled" would be "Paradise", or what William Blake, addressing its condition when it had lost its Innocence (“Paradise Lost”), saluted in a famous anti-Newtonian vision:

Earth was not: nor globes of attraction
 The will of the Immortal expanded
 Or contracted his all flexible senses.
 Death was not, but eternal life sprung

—The First Book of Urizen plate 3.

Like Blake’s “Earth”, Kennickell’s world gets perpetually translated back into unworldly forms. As in Blake, Kennickell’s are often explicitly religious forms, though unlike Blake’s, they are also all forms of a “Natural Religion” that is post-Newtonian. Kennickell calls one “Androgenous Landscape” (3.95), another “Frank B. as Moonlit Landscape” (5.176.5), but his other landscapes—they are Legion—are left “Untitled” because—like those two he names—they are the consecrated landscapes that “never were on land or sea”. Some appear to be recalling “those infinite mountains of light” that shine through Blake’s illuminated world because, like Blake’s visions, Kennickell’s pictorial worlds are as weightless (“light”) and as n-dimensional as Byzantine icons, and as “all flexible” as the drawings of children. So does his work salute a mysterium as present to the world of Pee Wee Herman as it is to the world of the ancient Easter “Exsultet”.

The earliest drawings are as arresting as anything he would later produce. They are composite floral and figural forms conceived and executed as provocations to invent further transformations from the elementary unit: a sinuous line executed in dense black India ink on typing paper. The catalogue presents the merest selection from the scores of variations—at once meticulous and naïve—that Kennickell played with this idea in 1967–1968. The entire set is crucial to recognize since it announces what I take to be Kennickell’s overriding pictorial commitment: to the (decisively Blakean) “minute particular”. Kennickell clearly recognized and ran with Blake’s wordplay on the word “minute”. The profusion of these drawings is an index to the act of double devotion each makes to detailed extravagance and studied immediacy. Like G. Spencer Brown’s demonstration of the Laws of Form of a mathesis, Kennickell’s work as a whole might be usefully seen as a demonstration of the Laws of Form of an aesthesis.

One of those drawings, not even an “important” one, is notable if one were interested in tracking the historical development of Kennickell’s work. The “Untitled” no. 1.425 is the only india ink drawing deliberately executed as recognizably male. With cartoon arms outstretched, he is a ludicrous comic-strip figure calling out “HI!” to the viewer. Except here, no words appear in any drawings from 1967–1968 nor do any of them explicitly declare, comical as they often are, such a self-aware comedic attitude. But in many of the works of 1969–70 nonsense words and glyphs, and a ludic attitude, surrounds nearly all the figures, scenes, and reflections. “Untitled” forms (2.450, 2.430) answer to wordless calls made by outrageous figures like the beadle of a Deadpan Alley (2.410) and the pivotal Midsummer Night’s Dream drawings. Puck’s magical declaration (2.445) hangs in a weightless frame limply tethered to the inner frame of the picture itself. The space and its assembled parts are as perverse as the undecipherable set of glyphs and the nonsensical phrase that serves to gloss the work. Unhinging itself from conventional visual and linguistic reference points, the drawing salutes the presence of a mischievous and unknown order: a kind of chaotic freedom that oft was thought but ne’er so well—so subtractly—expressed. The force of the pictorial argument is underscored by the formal discretion that is such a hallmark of Kennickell’s work.

For the next ten years—1970–1980—he delivered focused theatrical displays of a single vegetative androgyne or a dialogical pair that announce scenes of merging and emergent forms of natural, cosmic, and transnatural transformations (for instance 3.55, 3.190, and 3.375). A relevant variation appears in the set of three surviving “Eteocles” drawings of 1969 (see 2.380.2). For one thing, they are the only truly savage drawings in Kennickell’s oeuvre. They call attention to an event in the mytho-history of Thebes when Eteocles and his brother killed each other in a brutal struggle for political power. It’s difficult not to think that the drawings probably reflect Kennickell’s years in Chicago in the late ’60s. But they also forecast a motif that will dominate his work from 1971 forward: the numerous representations of two coupled figures that either celebrate their union and/or the intensity of their relation and/or a sparagmos of desire. An important variation on the motif represents a single figure being wrenched in different directions, or being contorted by some unapparent inertial force.

In 1975 Kennickell created an unusual dynamic form fixed in a timeless instant of cosmic ritual drama (3.165.0). It carried an equally unusual title: “Mother spirit of being illuminates and darkens the depths in perpetual fever of care to keep us alive in spacetime”. Like several other key figurations, this icon will often resurface—sometimes in piecemeal, often zoomed close—and it nearly always shapeshifts. But in all its forms it is a substantive constellation whose decorative vocabulary is drawn from Modern reflections on “spacetime”. As with his early india ink drawings, the figure immediately began metastasizing through a series of related drawings that feature abrupted vortices, cosmic horizons, and fragments of vast stellar fires in primary reds, blues, and golden yellows. But since the emergence of the thematic “Unchained Flowers” (3.10: 1971), and the “Androgenous Landscapes” (1974) they call home, orange, violet, and especially green were also emerging as vital expressive resources. So in 1975 green led a color/line breakthrough that brought Kennickell’s abstracted cosmic enclosures to erupt as a newly energized set of unchained androgenous creatures. While 3.180, 3.190, 3.195 and 3.200 are among Kennickell’s most arresting transformations, they announce a host of similar creatures and cosmic icons that populate his pictures into 1980, when Kennickell’s work came to a sudden halt that lasted for 12 years.

It resumed in 1992 with a backward glance at the most intense of the early india ink drawings and watercolors. Especially striking are the unsettled and unsettling pictures that recall the comical and ironic drawings of 1969–70—for instance, the acrylic and watercolor drawing (5.20) of a figure set in a pose of strained expectancy as if, like Hardy’s Darkling Thrush, he were stricken by a sight of hope or wonder “whereof he knew / But [we were] unaware”. Its expressive import hovers somewhere between the “Eteocles” set and the Deadpan Alley figures.

What he has in view is what we can watch happening between 1993 and 2001 in Kennickell’s all but obsessive series of chromatic abstractions that may have been inspired by the example of Mark Rothko. Unlike the iconic colors that dominate the drawings and paintings up to 1980, the primary and secondaries are here dissolving into mists of shifting tones sinking into scrambled polychromatic forms that accumulate in the polarized fields set by a variety of angular shapes. Echoing the odd, virtually neoplatonic glyphs that Kennickell played with in 1969–1970, these are all more loosely defined, “in keeping” with the chromatic investigations. Even more multiplied than the india ink drawings, these works reach back to embrace and often overwhelm the figural motifs that Kennickell brought forth between 1967 and 1980. Colors dance (5.194), hover (5.206.1, float (5.205.26), fluctuate, spring up, turn, tumble, twist, hang suspended, explode, mix, match, splatter, flit, mingle, leak, implode, rest, and spread in hundreds of minutely particularized innovations. Between 1993 and 2001 Kennickell’s early, airless, psychosomatic and megacosmic pictures began learning how to breathe.

To appreciate the rationale and significance of the work during these years, it helps to look again briefly at where the creatures populating the 1970s came from and where they were heading.

Initially Kennickell’s cosmic orientation led him to undertake a number of large scale works: acrylics like “Out of the heart of flowers come a thousand songs” (3.110) and the three ambitious stained glass windows, most notably the massive 3.75.2. Fronting a secular laity with the “Mother spirit” prayer, all either perform acts of direct ritual address or illustrate the prayer’s urgent message in action. The turn to the physically demanding stained glass medium was decisive because it set both artist and work in a direct relation to a breathing world. In these invitations to vision Blake’s Newtonian spaces are long gone. The works direct their contemporary viewers to look both with and through the eye. That is the action explicitly announced by the large stained glass of 1973 (3.70.3). Flowers rise through an organic molecular grid toward the aromatic benzene rings that are (alternately and simultaneously) reflective and see-through mirrors.

The breathtaken color exercises of the ’90s are a direct function of Kennickell’s representation of his initial act of creation: the sinuous line of india ink that drew from emptiness a visible space for multiplying distinctive forms. Those forms in turn created distinction at a second order, a set of forms that declared any visibilities—the primary colors, spatial media, and their textural possibilities—might be formally distinguished so that further distinctive forms—crucially, the secondary colors—could be pressed into unchained flowering existences. Thence followed the chromatic abstractions of the ’90s, works that are only “abstract” in a referential frame of reference. As sensible realities each work, each spatial moment in each work, is as minutely particular as any thing (person, place, soul, whatever). For here, as in Blake, “everything that lives is Holy”: every thing at any scale of space and time.

That larger context illuminates the significance of Kennickell’s most impressive large scale work—the untitled 1975 stained glass 3.75.2. It is an act of homage to sinuous form first announced, so to say, by the silent tongues that slip from the lips of Kennickell’s ritual talking heads (as in 3.20). They assume their signature vegetable formation in 1973 (3.60, 3.65) and are cosmically located in the small stained glass of 1974 (3.90.2). The motif would become the abounding form of grace and worship in Kennickell’s spectacularly small, virtually hand-held pictures, collages, and boxes that have commanded his attention since 2017. It is the form of fern-unfolding and sporadic fern generation, the pivotal theme that runs through Kennickell’s unchained androgenous melodies. The stained glass window 3.75.2 is its great act of annunciation.

3.75.2 is explicitly theatrical. A curtain rises to reveal a mature fern leaning to the right and unfurling itself above four fledgling fronds emerging from the spores below. Flaunting its massive artfulness, the work is yet a great Song of Innocence. Watery Morning light has risen on an eternal moment of awakening, of mothering care, and of easy childlike response. Affecting and unaffected, it is a scene of pure grace, mutual salutation, and common worship. Bowing to each other, the ferns are the center of a grateful world unfolding into life.

In 2001 Kennickell's work stopped once again and—except for a brief venture in 2005—it didn't resume until 2014 when he made another startling set of substantial investments, this time in the photographics that a few works in 2005 and the '90s briefly toyed with. Fragments of broken glass yield glimpses of snapshot people (6.1.12) and/or magazine illustrations of human models, clothing, fabrics, and quotidian stuff (6.1.70). Some of the works arrange sets of shaped pieces that look like the fractured remains of a completed, or perhaps not yet finished, stained glass window or cutout from a printed plate (6.1.17, 6.1.47). Others are yet more artfully shaped glass flowers (6.1.1, 6.1.15) through which (in which?) we get fleet and ludic glimpses of what Lawrence Ferlinghetti called "the gone world". 6.1.19 is a charming collage of cut-up print images and other materials organized as the remains of what might have been an imaginary garden by the sea.

But no one should take that description seriously since the collages and boxes that flood from the "perpetual fever of care" that is the "Mother spirit" possessing Kennickell's imagination live only to put their charmed and charming lives at your service. The comic spirit that turned up in 1969 and afterwards returned now and again (5.205.18) makes commanding performances throughout the latest works (6.1.82; 6.1.91; 6.1.114; 6.1.121; 6.1.123; or leaping ahead, 6.4.21) when the "Mother spirit" of 1975 returns in a perpetual fever of infantine comic visions that might be imagined singing a honky-tonk version of "Unto us a child is given". It is the "Poet showered by moonlight" (6.2.23.1) who has boxed up an impish smile for a transport to us.

Notice how well that poet has learned to bow his head from those young ferns who first appeared in the springtime of his work. The simple posture of satisfied reverence that pervades the late work (6.1.110, 6.1.113, 6.1.115, 6.1.126, 6.2.23.2, 6.2.29, 6.2.44, 6.2.57, etc.) announces the paradisaic days of devoted lovers and acts of loving devotion (6.2.54, 6.2.65, 6.3.35). The not-to-be-believed wonders of Christian theology get translated to a new heaven of comic relief overturning into a new kind of blessed belief ("Assumption of the Virgin", 6.1.116.1) through a newly and globally re-mythologized earth ("Ganesha with Saints", 6.1.97; "Shiva in a Manger", 6.1.102). Is 6.1.100 a vision of the Transfiguration of Jesus, of his Ascension? Whatever, like 6.1.112, it is telling us there are wonderments to behold.

The works from 2014 forward, even the most outrageous, hold in view one predominant thought: repose in themselves ("Rising Thought", 6.2.16). But perfect self-awareness is the special focus of the works of 2022–2024. Each person, I imagine, will (must?) register that effect personally. Speaking for myself I am left with nothing to say about (say) 6.3.13, 6.3.25, 6.3.32, 6.4.2, 6.4.12, 6.4.26, 6.4.30, 6.5.1, 6.5.3; or, perhaps even more spell-bound, by (say) 6.4.29, 6.5.1, 6.5.3.

The pacific majesty of these small works draws upon an unusual assortment of materials. Boxes, boards, and paper upload acrylics, watercolors, and gold leaf with assorted domestica facta (caps and foil from wine bottles, metal champagne bottle top cages, candy wrappers, and pieces of familiar fabric like kitchen towels and jeans). Most consequential are the individual threads that have been carefully detached from rolls of artist canvas. These plain-weave warp or weft strings are then colored and laid into the collages and boxes to define an asymmetric fretwork, at once tender and tense, that is the signature quality of these animated creatures. When a piece of canvas is part of a collage, individual threads are exposed at the edge and left to flutter and wave. But whether waving or running about, the delicate filaments display each work in the act of discovering a spirited disposition of its elements.

Kennickell called them “Angels” (6.2.19) in a 2020 acrylic work on watercolor paper. Trailing clouds of wine bottle foil and gold leaf glory, they are not fallen, they are “Falling” angels, multicolored fiddleheaded divers in an abstract blue field bringing earth-colors to the flaming storm—the “Mother spirit”—below. These are the creatures of Lucifer realized according to Kennickell’s Blakean reading of “dies inlucescat et lucifer oriatur in cordibus vestris” (“day dawns and Lucifer arises in your hearts”). Who is that Lucifer? “Ille inquam lucifer”, I mean that Lucifer celebrated in the Easter “Exsultet”: “Flammas eius lúcifer matutínus invéniat:/ ille inquam lúcifer qui nescit occásum (“May Lucifer’s auroral flames appear:/ I mean that Lucifer, who never dies”). The Dawn Treader, the Light Bearer: Shelley’s “Morning Star among the living . . . bringing/ New splendor to the dead”. So while I am greatly aware of the “art” that has gone into these works, to experience them is to recognize an artfulness that has gone without saying because the art is the saying. These are creatures at peace with themselves, they are simple, “natural”.

So the experience they summon doesn’t bear with saying either. It’s as impossible to explain as to explain the experience of breathing, or speaking, or picking something up.

I think of what Reginald Blythe once wrote of haiku: that “a haiku is not a poem, it is not literature; it is a hand beckoning, a door half-opened”. Your creatures are calling another creature to attention, they are whispering to the person who comes face to face with them, the person they care for: “listen, these are doors of perception. The art goes without saying.”
